NEOCLASSICAL PULSE DIAGNOSIS

Extraordinary Vessels and the Six Channels

> Presented by Thomas Richardson

Perth November 2019

Foundations: Saturday & Sunday 9-10th Advanced: Monday 11th

What is Neoclassical Pulse Diagnosis?

Neoclassical Pulse Diagnosis is a powerful system of pulse diagnosis that is deeply rooted in the classics (especially the Mai Jing). This method was developed by Dr. William Morris and it is a systematic integration of classical anatomical approach to pulse taking along with channel-based methods of assessment.

Neoclassical Pulse Diagnosis is based on an understanding of complementary positions and spatial correlations of the individual pulse positions. It allows one to diagnose channel involvements (Extraordinary Vessels, 6-channel) as well as various temporal cycles (Ying Qi and Wei Qi cycles) and five-element imbalances.

Some have called it an 'acupuncturist's pulse diagnosis,' as it can accurately diagnose channel imbalances. Once proficient in this system, the pulse can guide one immediately to a specific acupuncture point that will not only bring balance to the pulse, but also instantly shift the patient's experience - whether by decreasing pain, increasing range of motion, changing their internal state of consciousness, or bringing about other noticeable shifts.

What will you learn?

Foundations

In this 2-day seminar, practitioners will learn and practice pulse diagnosis methods that identify involvements of the eight extraordinary vessels and the six channels, as well as the Compass Method for finding five-element imbalances with the organs.

- The Extraordinary Vessels are transystemic and can be used to treat almost any condition and are particularly useful in cases of trauma and overwhelm.
- The Six Channels are extremely effective for treating musculoskeletal issues and can also be used to address internal organ disorders.
- The Compass Model is used to balance the 5 phase energies in a given individual organ.

Advanced Workshop*

Building on the knowledge and the techniques introduced in the Foundations workshop. Practitioners will progress and advance their knowledge of Neoclassical Pulse Diagnosis.

- How to identify and treat blockages in the Ying Qi and Wei Qi cycle. These methods are clinically useful for addressing insomnia and sleep issues, allergies and Wei Qi issues, as well as pain that comes and goes throughout the day or night.
- * Attendees must complete the foundations workshop before attending the advanced course.

About Thomas

Thomas Richardson is a Licensed Acupuncturist, a board-certified Diplomate of Oriental Medicine, as well as a scholar and teacher of Acupuncture and Oriental Medicine.

Thomas was mentored closely by William Morris, PhD, DOM, LAc, a world leading expert and scholar on pulse diagnosis. He is one of a very few students authorised by Dr. Morris to teach the system of Neoclassical Pulse Diagnosis. Thomas completed a Master of Theological Studies at Harvard Divinity School. His research focused on connections between Buddhism, Daoism, and medicine, as well as trauma, storytelling, and healing.

While attending Harvard, Thomas was on the faculty of the New England School of Acupuncture.

Thomas currently resides in Boulder, CO, where he has his clinical practice and is on the faculty at Southwest Acupuncture College. He has recently released a book, Extraordinary Chinese Medicine.
